A law has been passed changing the driver's license system to a graduated system. I agree to the passing of this law. This system has the ability to keep young drivers safe. Limiting the amount of passengers and also limiting the hours the person can drive + gives the person more time to get use to driving. The ~~to~~ full license at age 17 is the best age.

Firstly, at 15 years of age most kids haven't matured enough to get behind the wheel and be responsible. Some would take advantage of a privilege such as driving to show off to friends. A young person like this should ~~stefor~~ receive a restricted learner's permit for. By having an adult with them and not a lot of friends in the car can help them focus on their surroundings. Distractions cause a lot of accidents.

Secondly, a 16 year old might have a job and they complain that they shouldn't have restricted hours so they can work. This is totally wrong. They shouldn't be working late at night anyway. By driving late when you are just starting to drive is risky. Falling asleep after a hard work day would be terrible. Especially at age 16. This is why I feel 16 is a good age for an intermediate license.

Thirdly, When a person is 17 they are probably fixing to graduate high school and have been through enough to be mature about things such as driving. They are more likely to not to show out and keep themselves from being distracted.

Therefore, If you want to keep the young drivers of today safe you would agree to this new law. It ~~is~~ has been passed, I feel, to save lives. Giving people time to learn with no distractions and this also teaches them to obey certain rules. This could n't is the way I feel
